Monday through Friday, a hardworking mom comes home everyday to cook a dinner for everyone to enjoy, even after a long hard day at work.

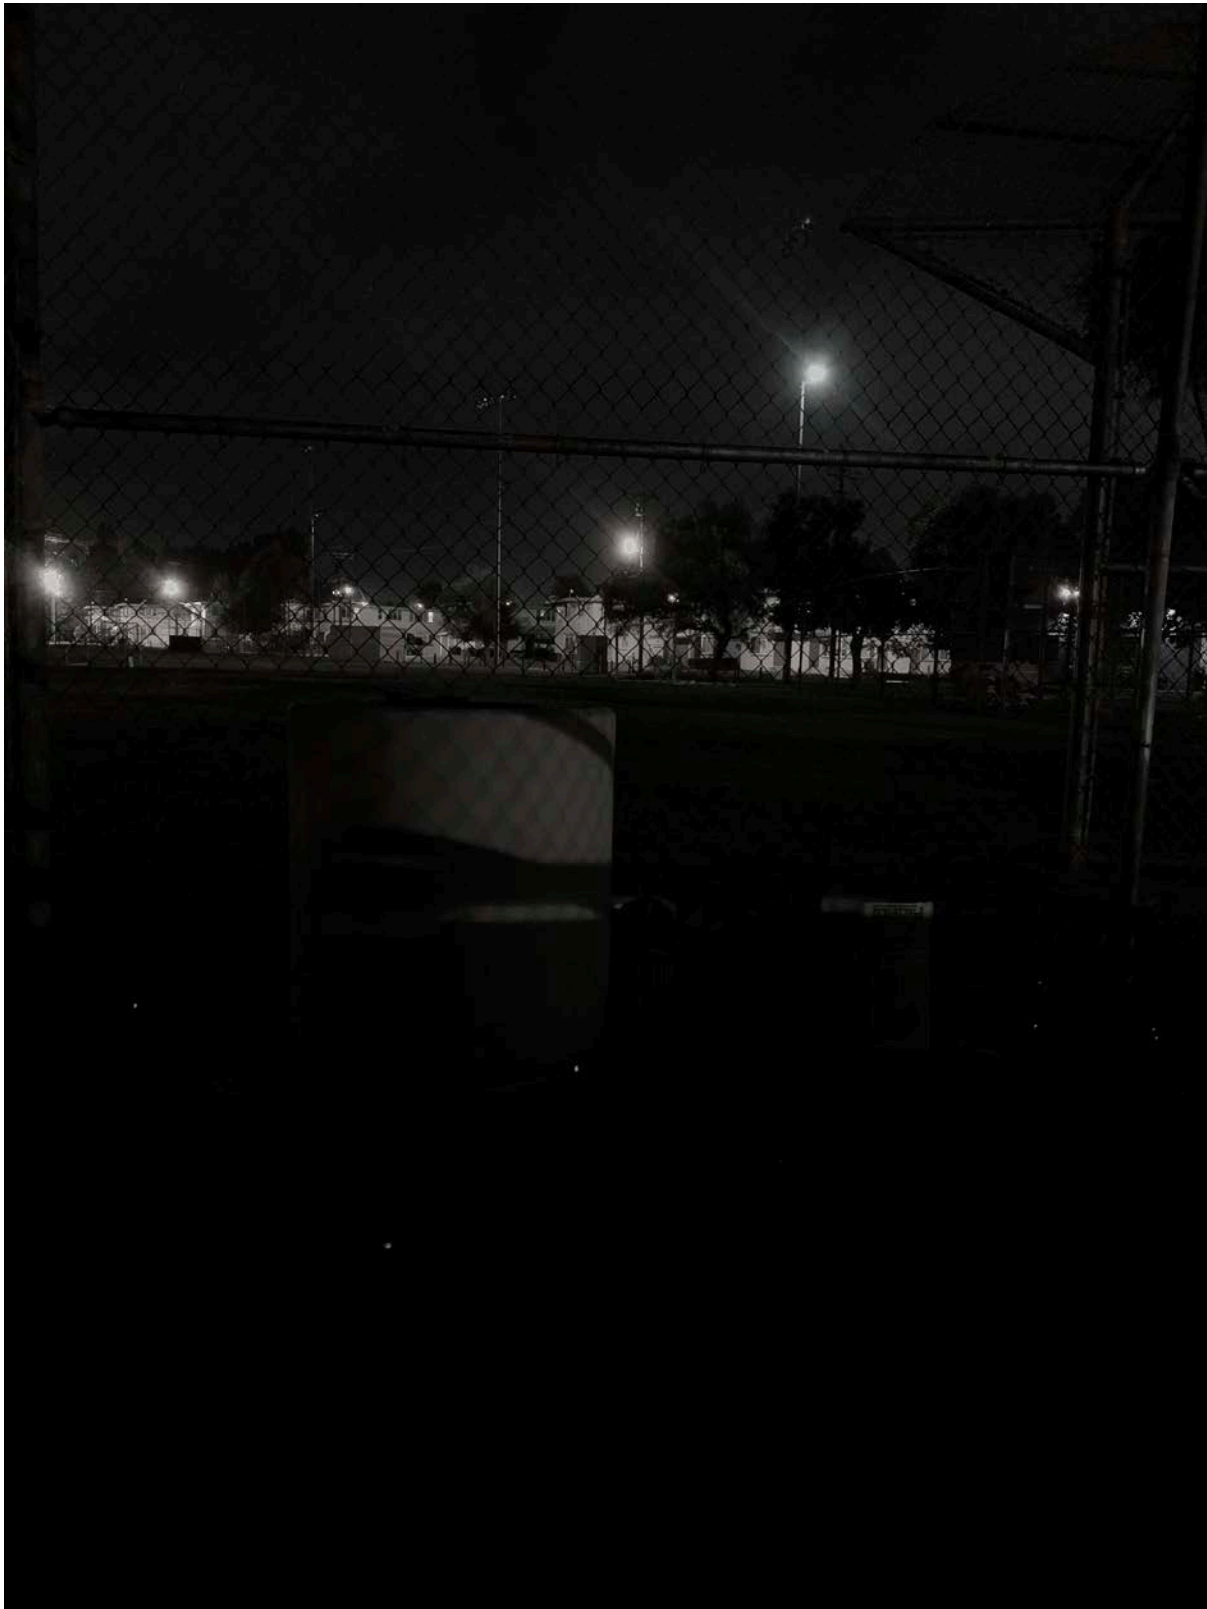

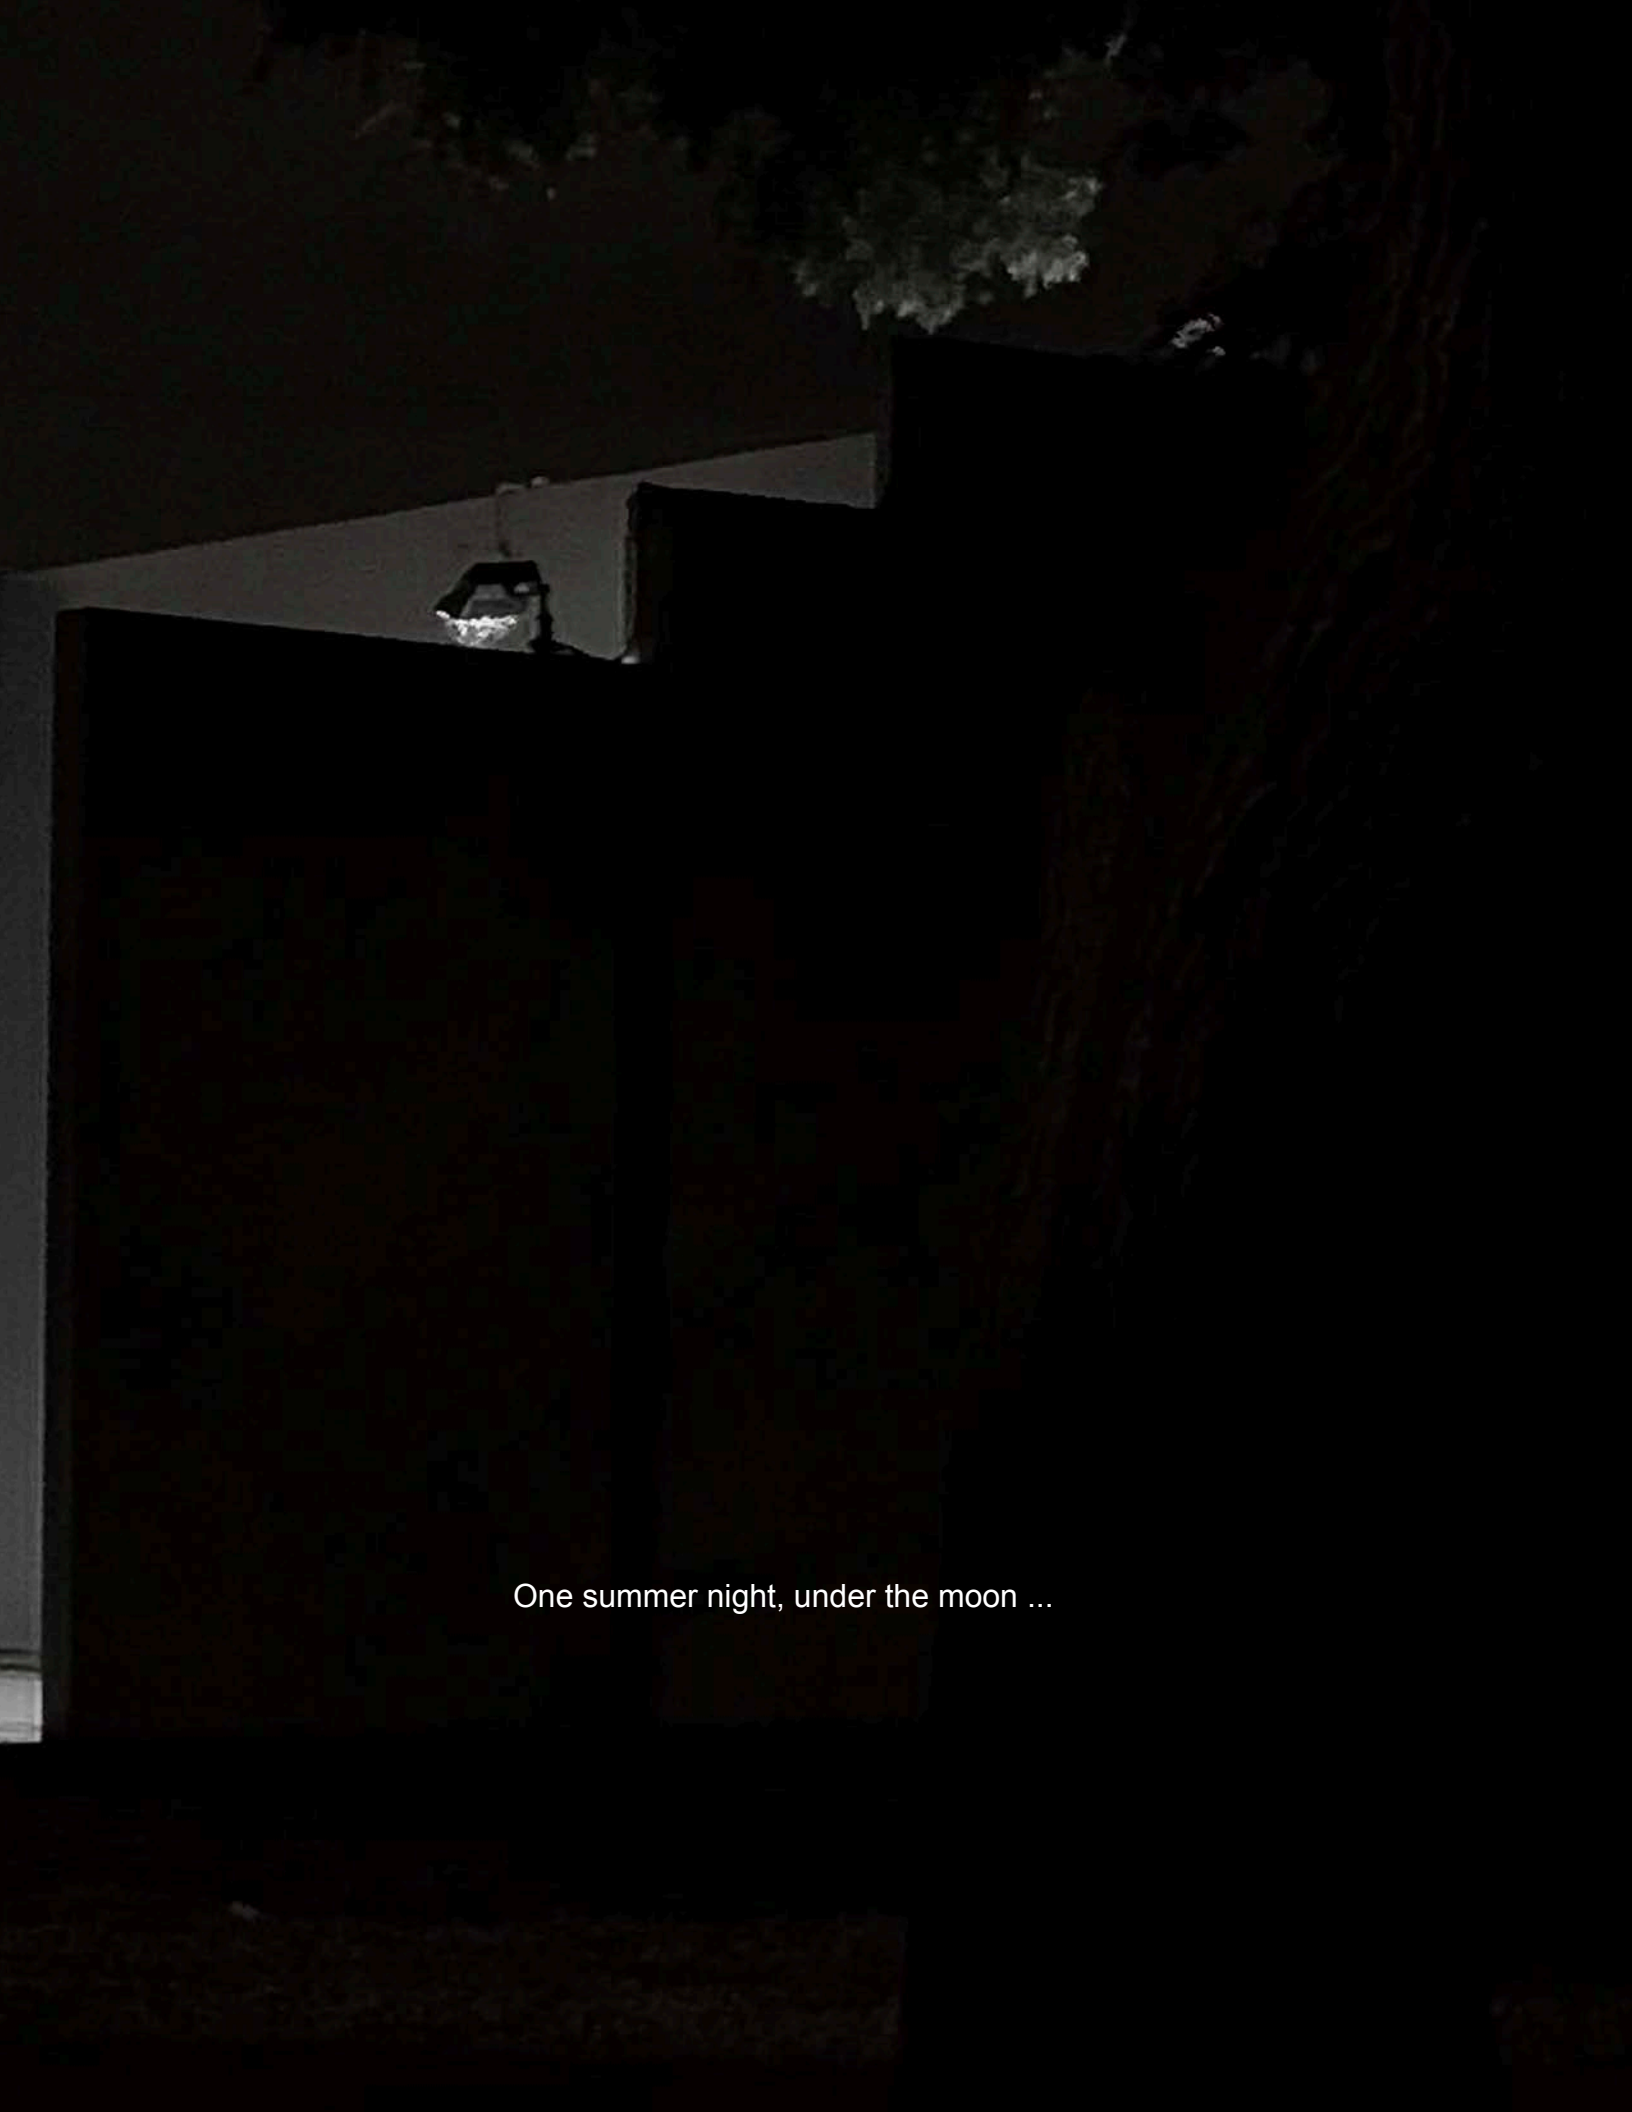

Music is my sanity, even on those bad days,
I always remember it's a bad day, not a bad life.

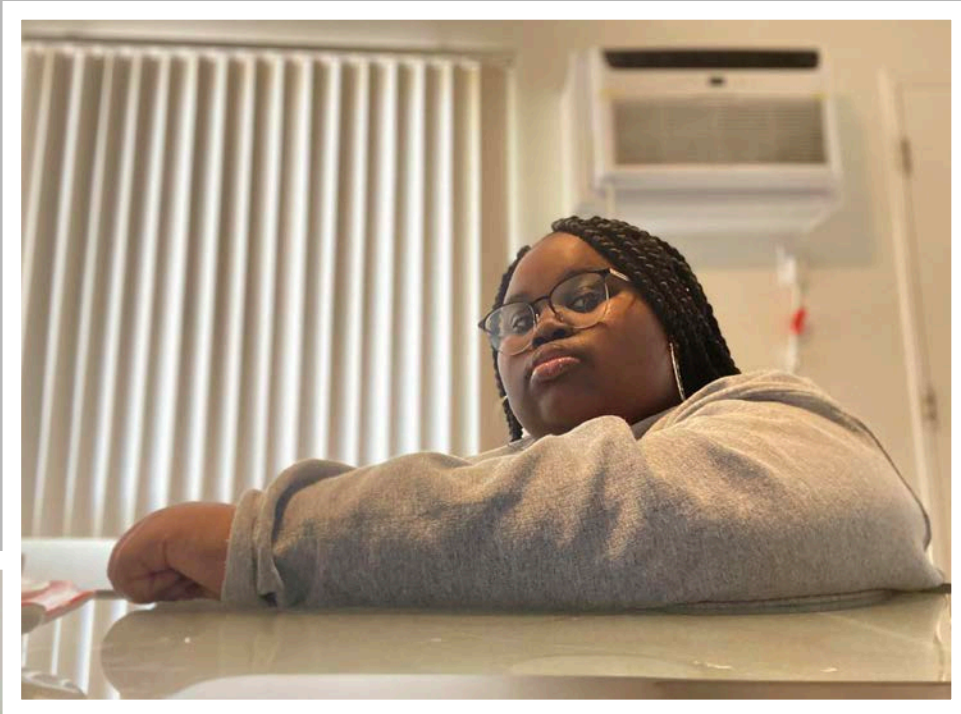

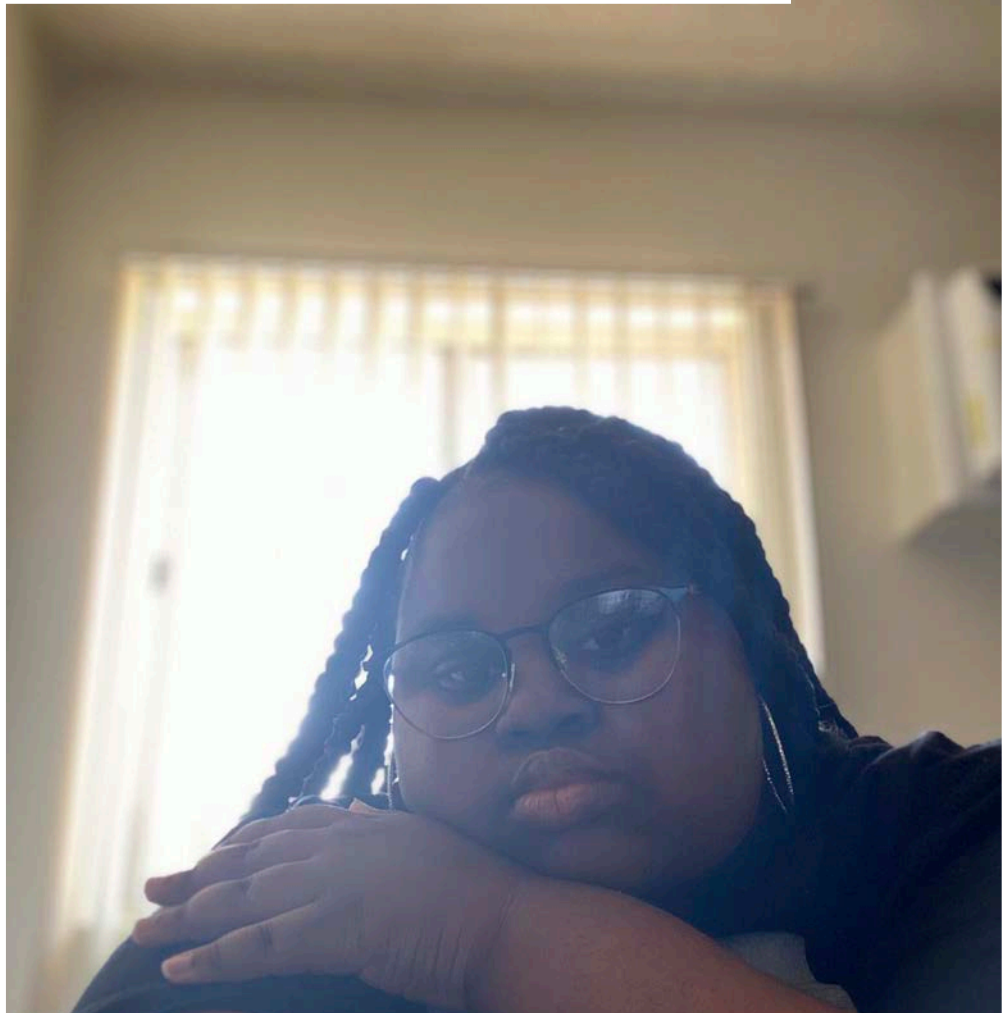

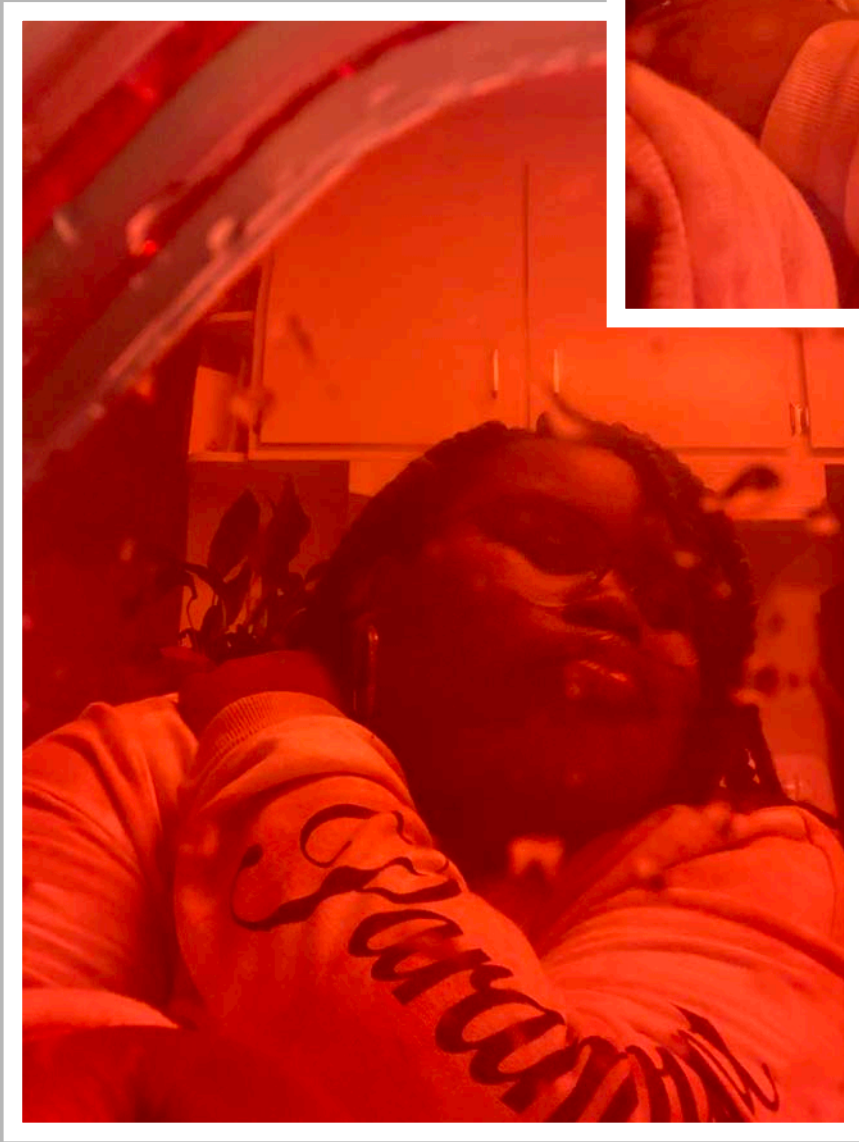

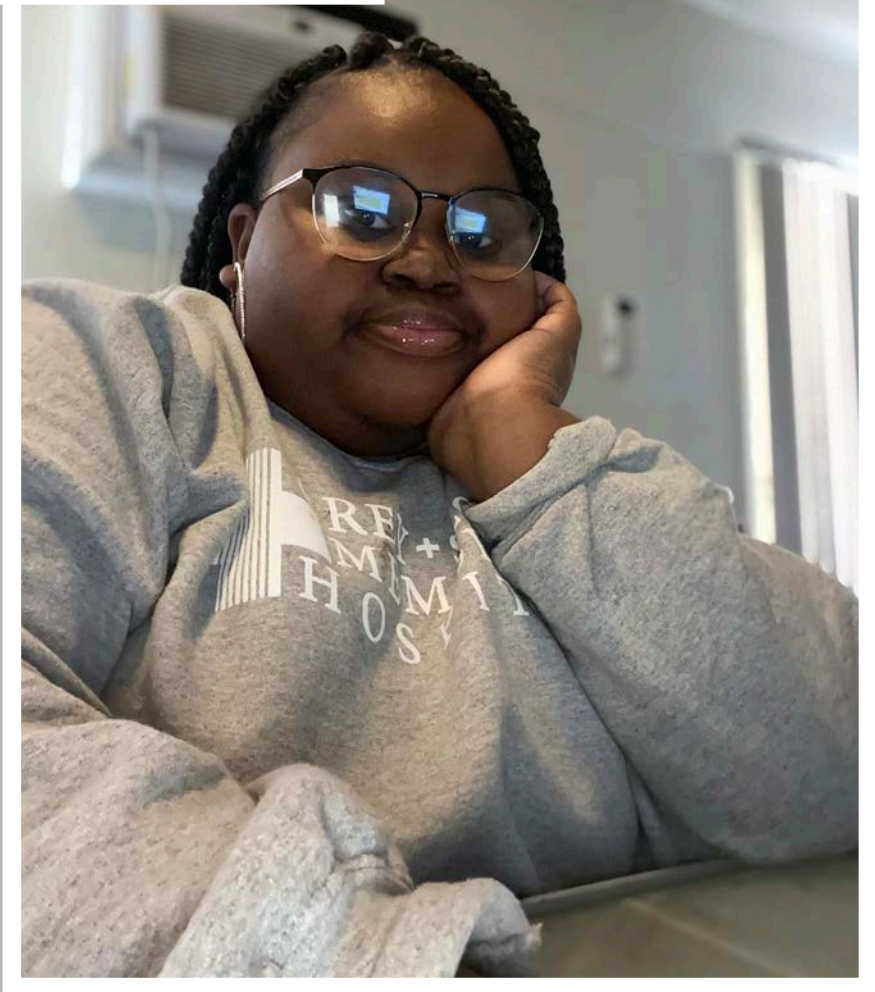

One summer night, under the moon ...

“Be yourself; everyone else is already taken.”
—Oscar Wilde

An incredibly beautiful sight is the sunset. If there are many clouds in the sky, they are painted in all sorts of colors - from bright yellow to blue-red, exciting and inspiring at the same time. It does not last long, but you want to remember it forever. The nights over the ocean are absolutely mesmerizing. It is calm, peaceful, and quiet. It looks like a red-orange has decided to drown in the mirror.

“Traveling is a brutality. It forces you to trust strangers and to lose sight of all the familiar comforts of home and friends. You are constantly off balance. Nothing is yours except the essential things — air, sleep, dreams, the sea, the sky. All things tending towards the eternal or what we imagine of it.”

Cesare Pavese

You can feel the cold wind blowing through your clothes. While some of the people sit and listen to a conductor talk about how beautiful Chicago is, the rest stare at the tall buildings and their reflections. Everyone on deck is frozen and waiting for the tour to end. You can feel how small you are compared to all the buildings in Chicago as you are standing and looking at this enchanting landscape.

“We experience happiness as a series of pleasing moments. They come and go like clouds, unpredictable, fleeting, and without responsibility to our desires. Through honest self-work, reflection, and meditation we begin to string more of these moments together, creating a web-like design of happiness that drapes around our lives.”

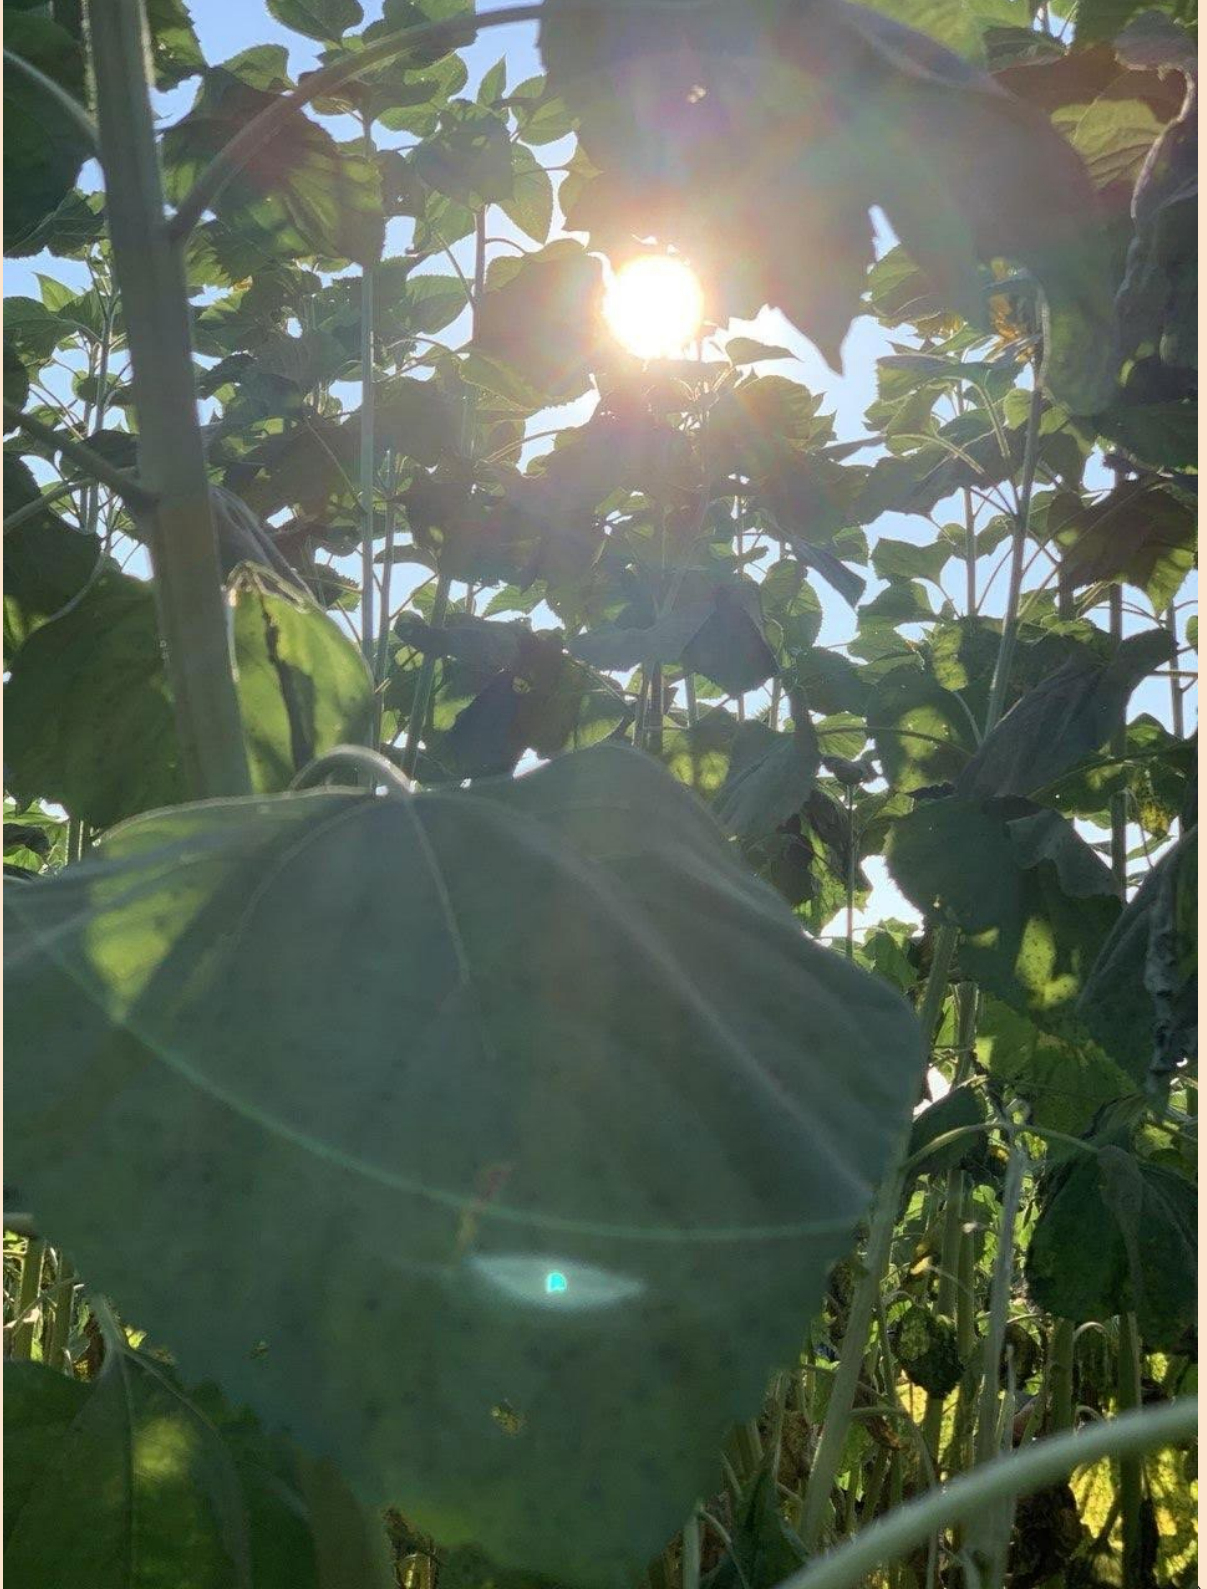

Tara Stiles

Autumn is the best time to walk in a park or forest. Everything around is replete with colors! Leaves rustle merrily underfoot.

Autumn gives us its fruits and pleases us with its last warm rays. The rainy time is about to begin. The colors will leave the streets. Gray everyday life with slush and mud will begin. But this also has its own romance.

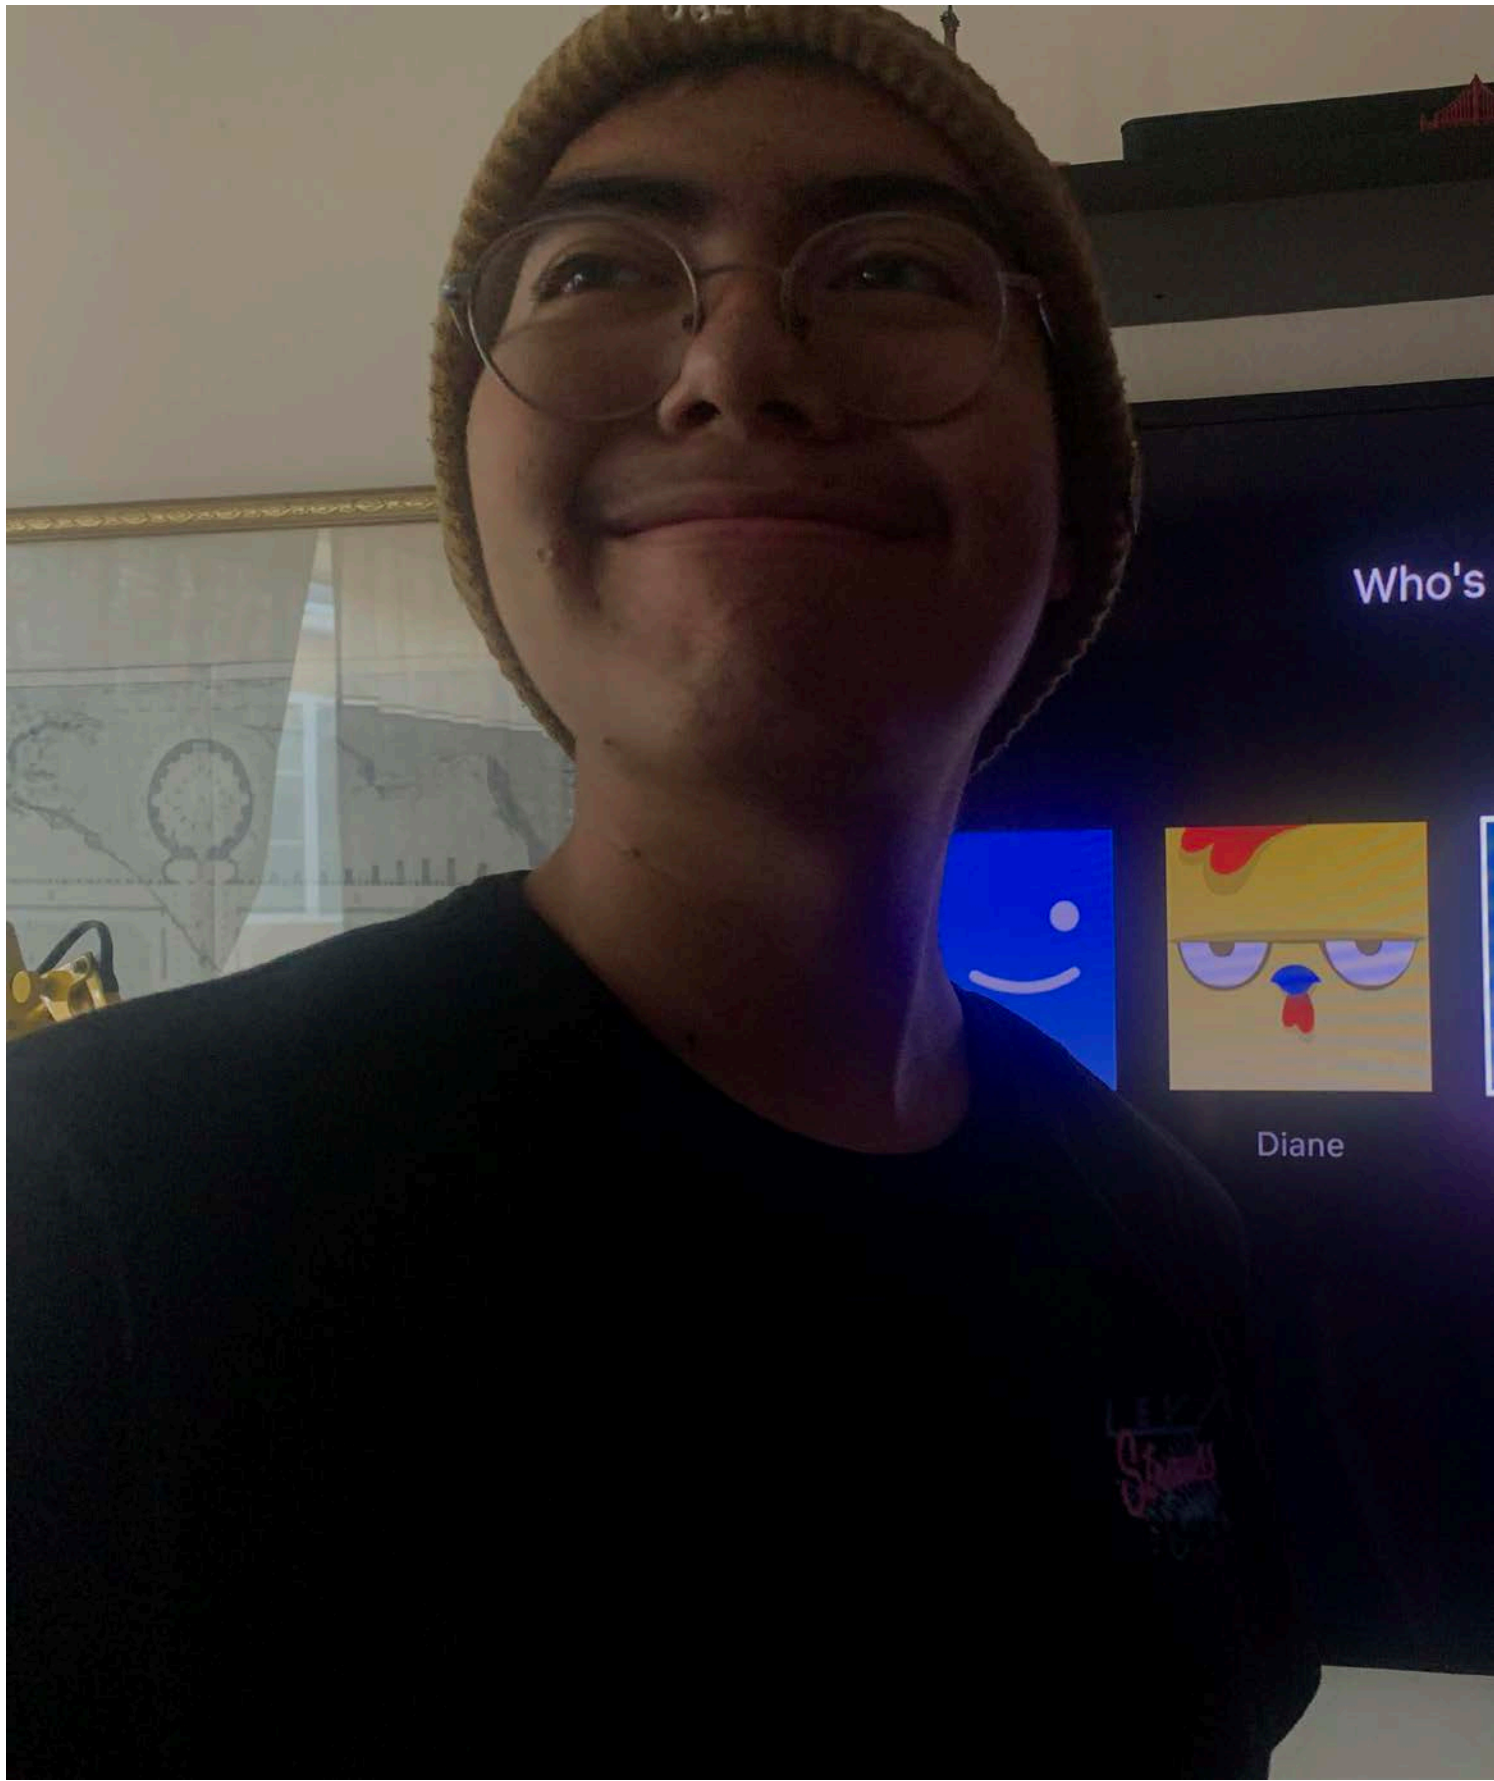

I am absolutely in love with fall, particularly this year when the summer heat kept me indoors so much. I've promised myself to be outside as much as possible to savor fall, and this week I was able to indulge with a trip to the Underwood Family Farms with my family.

During the pandemic, I try to work on my own terms. I feel like a hermit crab stuck in my shell, but am enjoying it.

Online school is a struggle since I often oversleep, but work it out eventually.

I try to check in on my friends to make sure they're having a good day.

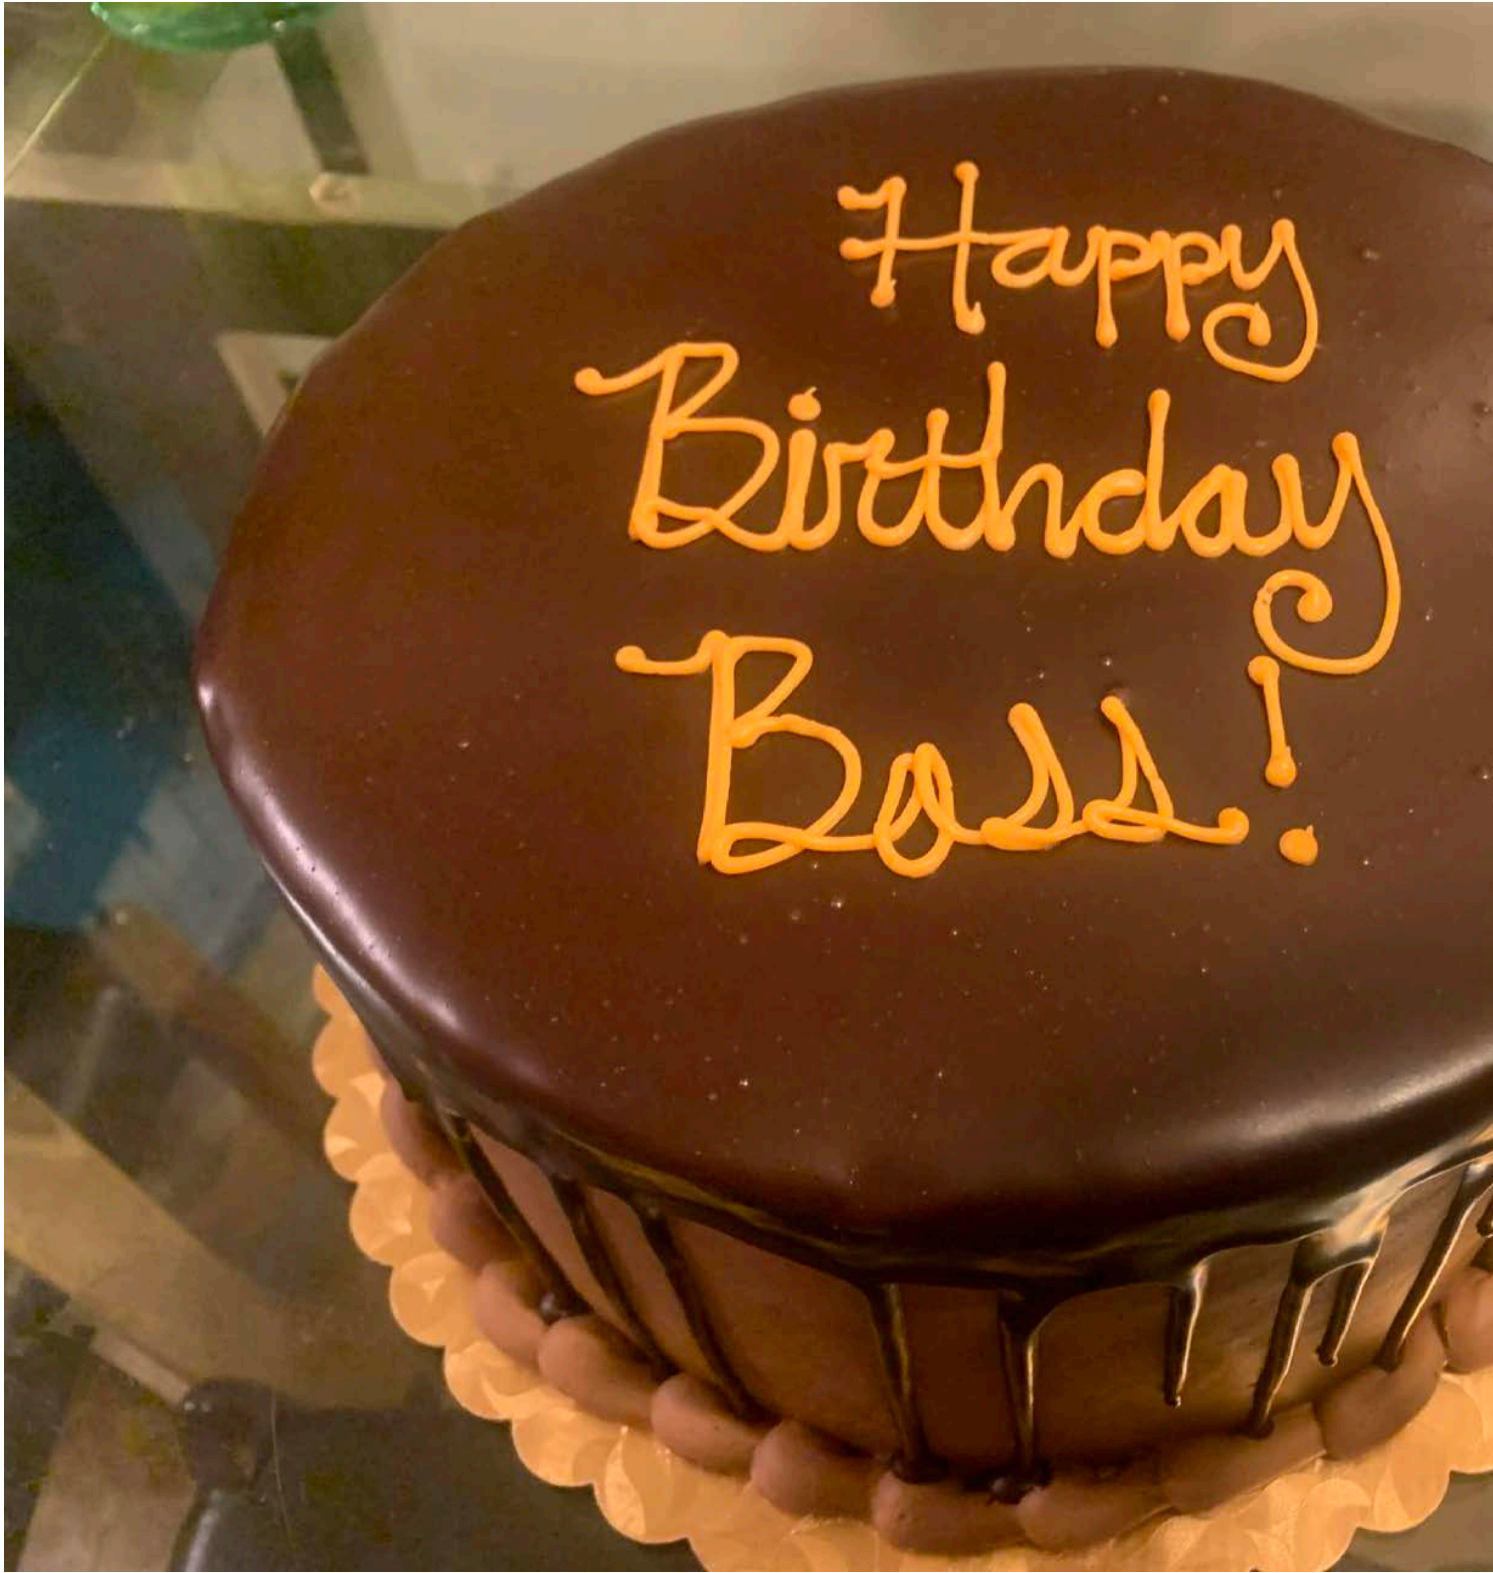

I like to binge watch Anime, vibe to music, eat a lot (like a bear) play video games, then rinse and repeat!

This is my cat, Bubbie. He is like a therapy session for me. We both like to nap, and we both eat like monsters. He's very persistent about getting into any kind of food, even if it's closed.

Bubbie likes to act innocent but won't get away with it! Overall, he is like a chill pill who looks wholesome but is a more like a bear. Anyway, he is still my favorite pet.

Happy Birthday
Boss!

Celebrating during the pandemic is a whole other take without your relatives there.

It still works though...
The benefits to this are that there are more leftovers for tomorrow!

This is my clone, his name is Bones. He watches over me as I do my homework to make sure that I stay on track and do not get bored.

One of my favorite foods is chili cheese fries from the Centinela Cafe. I would highly recommend this local cafe. This place has been here ever since I was born and it still gives a taste of home. This food makes it feel like you're buying off a vendor in a festival and you feel a whopping explosion like fireworks fill your tastebuds.

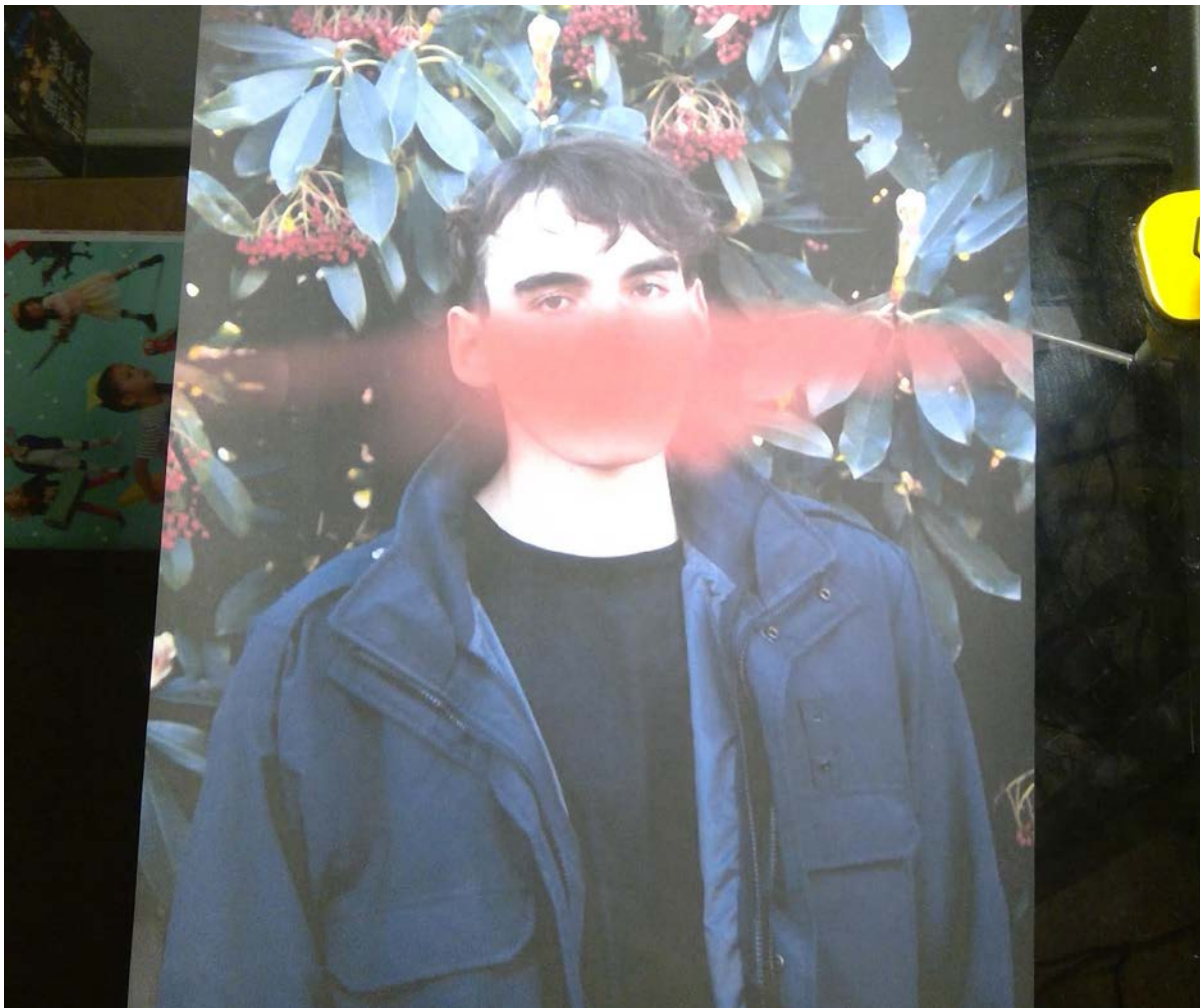

I tried to create a variation of an album.

I like an artist by the name of J^P^N (the album name is Unkind).

This album makes me feel as if I am blossoming into another dimension, a dimension of instruments.

It makes me feel like I'm wandering on the sidewalk in a lucid dream where my brain comes up with a made up story for each song.

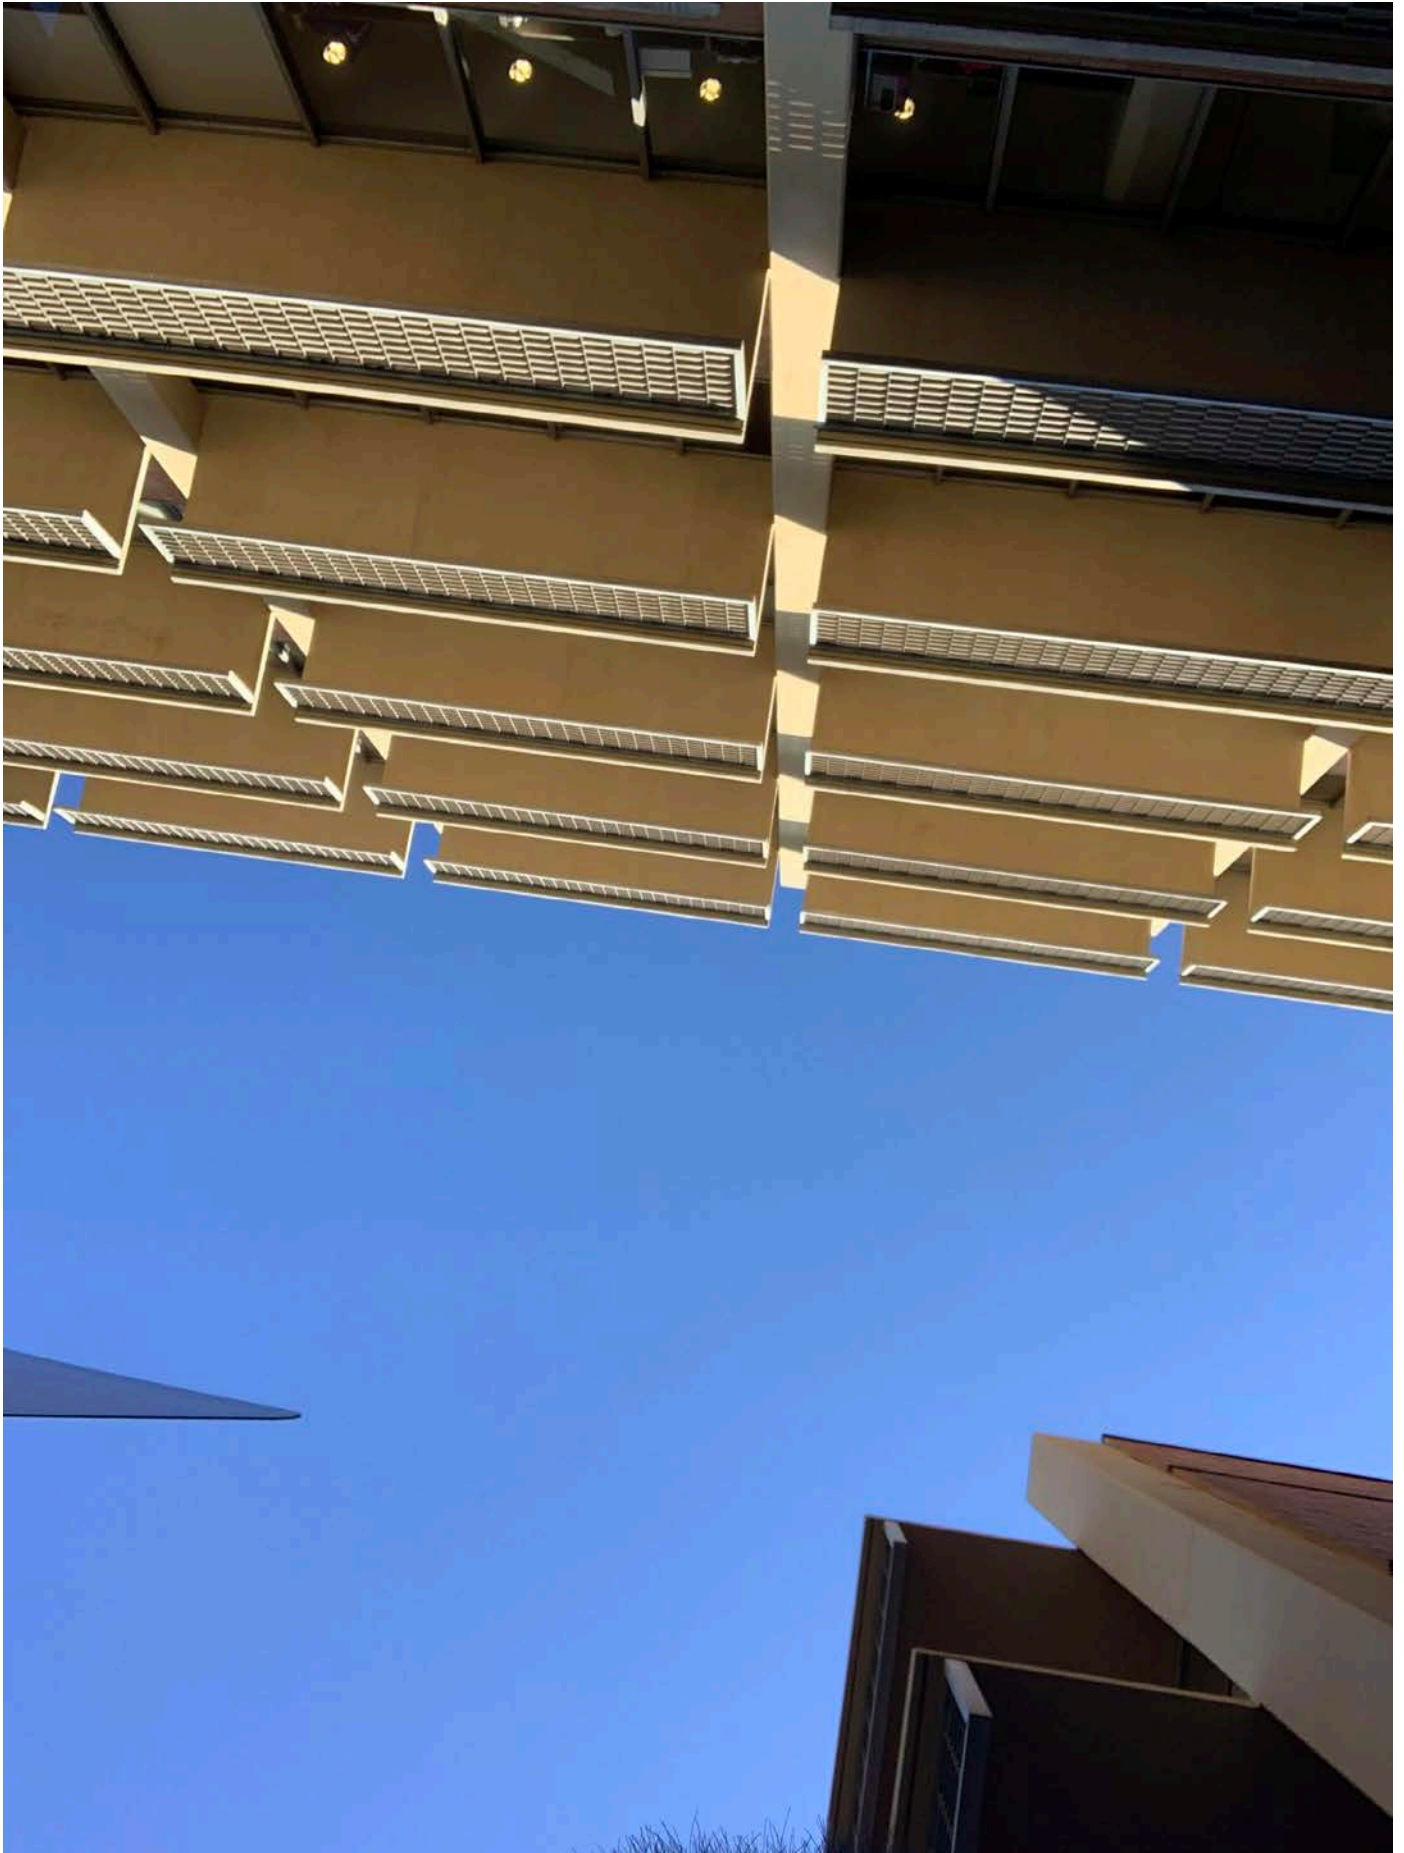

Looking up, I feel as if my thoughts are rising up like the buildings which brings me a sense of peace.

The blue sky represents relaxation and imagination. This calm state brings me bliss. It's as if I am floating with the mist.

Thank you for coming to my Ted Talk. I hope you enjoyed the wandering thoughts of a teenage boy.

Sincerely,
Valentin Hernandez

Here is a glimpse of what my life has looked like during quarantine

Ellie Waters

When I see my friends, we don't get to do many of the things we used to do, like bowling and going to restaurants. Now we are more limited and we spend most our time outside.

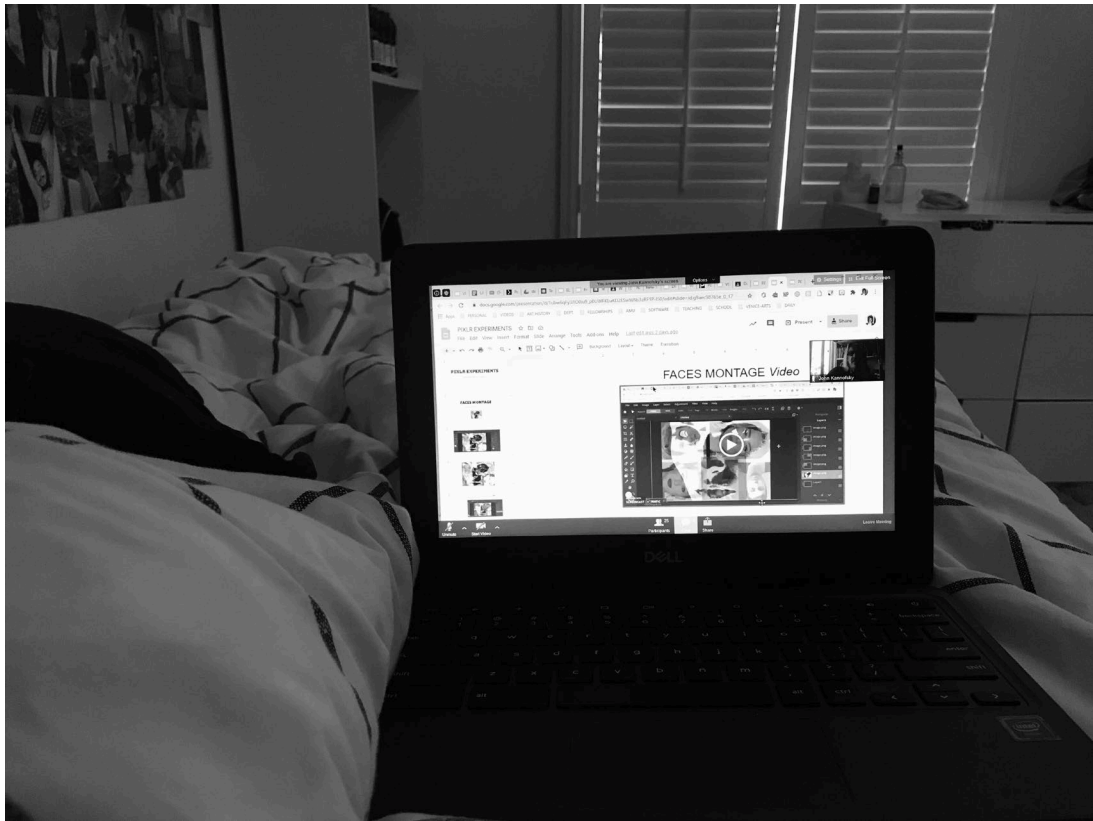

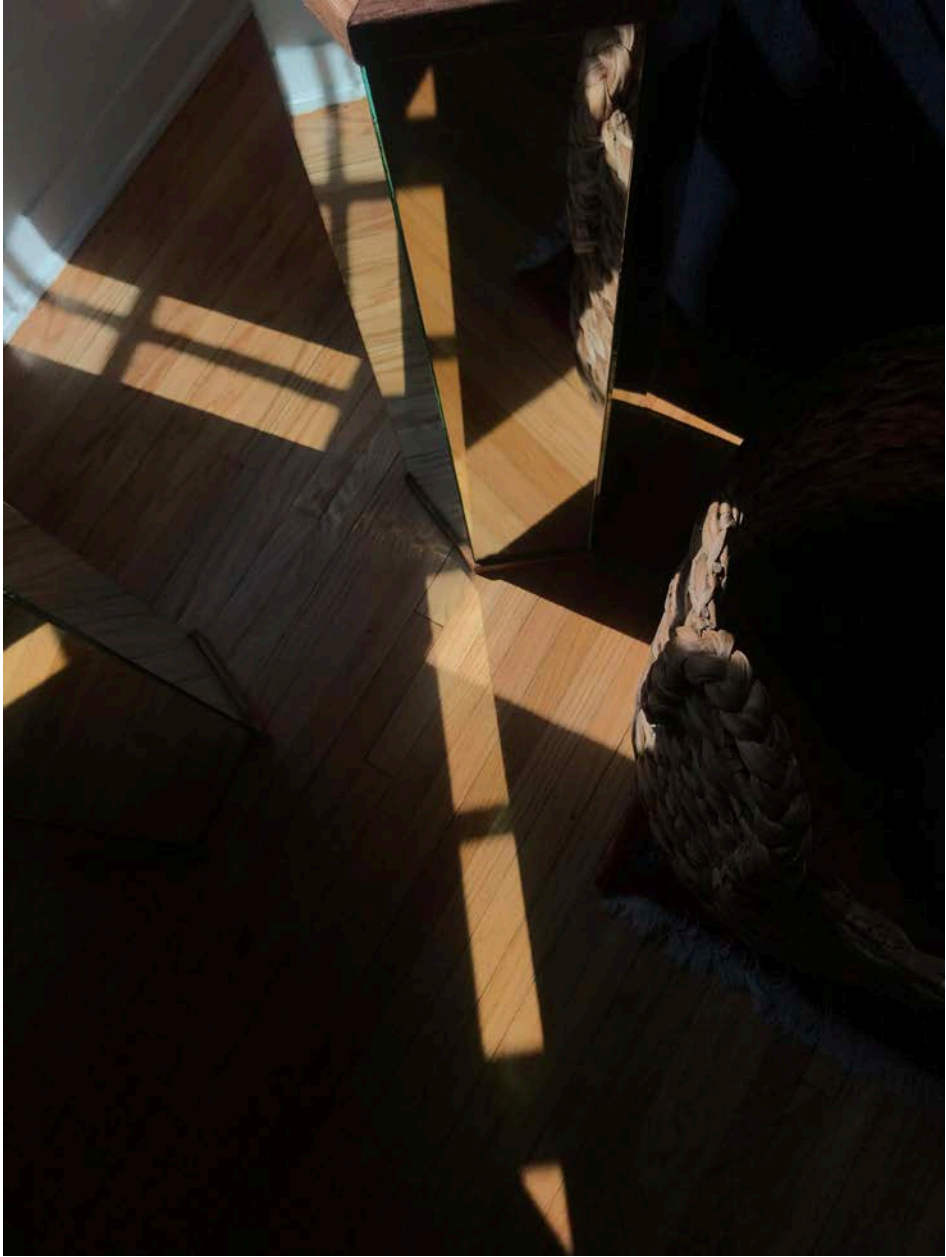

These pictures represent what brings me comfort while spending most my time at home.

was exchanged and politics discussed. A postal system using horses on overland routes and small ships on water routes was operating both within and between the colonies by the mid-18th century.

Religion → In these places seemed to not be as strict on religion

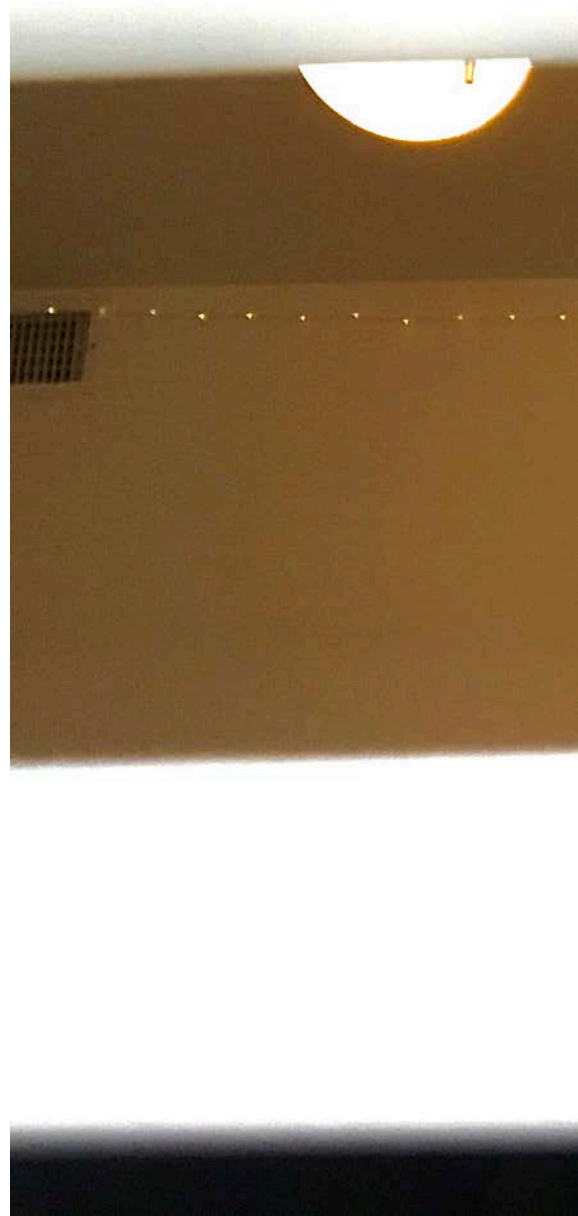

Although Maryland was founded by a Catholic proprietor, and larger towns such as New York and Boston attracted some Jewish settlers, the overwhelming majority of colonists belonged to various Protestant denominations. In New England, Congregationalists (the successors to the Puritans) and Presbyterians were most common. In New York, people of Dutch descent often attended services of the Reformed Church, while many merchants belonged to the Church of England, also known as Anglicans (and later, Episcopalians). In Pennsylvania, Lutherans, Mennonites, and Quakers were the most common groups. Anglicans were dominant in Virginia and some of the other southern colonies.

Challenges Each religious group, even the Protestants who dominated the colonies, faced problems. Jews, Catholics, and Quakers suffered from the most serious discrimination and even persecution. Congregationalist ministers were criticized by other Protestants as domineering and for preaching an overly complex doctrine. Because the Church of England was headed by the king, it was viewed as a symbol of English control in the colonies. In addition, there was no Church of England bishop in America to ordain ministers. The absence of such leadership hampered the church's development.

Established Churches In the 17th century, most colonial governments taxed the people to support one particular Protestant denomination. Churches financed through the government are known as established churches. For example, in Virginia, the established church was the Church of England. In Massachusetts Bay it was the Congregational Church. As various immigrant groups increased the religious diversity of the colonies, governments gradually reduced their support of churches. In Virginia, all tax support for the Anglican Church ended shortly after the Revolution. In Massachusetts by the time of the Revolution, members of other denominations were exempt from supporting the Congregational Church. However, some direct tax support of the denomination remained until the 1830s.

The Great Awakening

In the first decades of the 18th century, sermons in Protestant churches tended to and portrayed God as a benign creator of a per- than in Puritan times on

A photograph of several white flowers with five petals each, set against a dark, almost black background. The flowers are scattered across the frame, with some in sharp focus and others blurred. The lighting is soft, highlighting the delicate texture of the petals. The overall mood is serene and calm.

Calmness:

Nature; the fresh air and colors that bring serenity.

Jazmyne Williams

Since the pandemic, I've been locked in the house, not seeing other humans much. Nature has been one of the few ways I experience life. But a new life. Nature's fresh air is filtered through a mask. Smiling at strangers is obsolete. Petting other people's dogs is dangerous. Everyone is six feet apart. What we once knew as normal has completely changed, even nature.

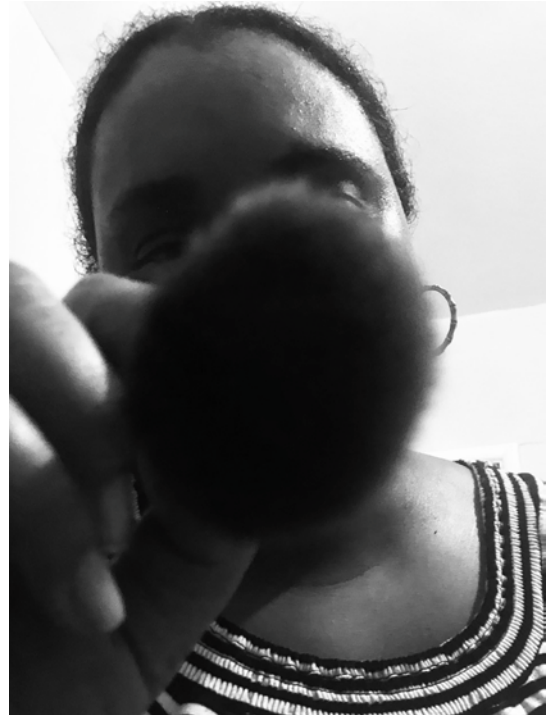

When I was in fourth grade, we did a Mother's Day project in class. The teacher told us we should pick colors that go together. I did the exact opposite and chose colors I thought were pretty, regardless of whether they went together.

As I was completing the assignment, other students and the teacher said things that implied that what I had done didn't look good because of the colors.

When I gave it to my mom she could tell I wasn't proud of it. She complimented it and explained how much she loved it. When I told her what had happened, she reassured me that what other people say doesn't matter.

Putting on makeup has bought me a lot of calmness and serenity during quarantine. Nature helps to calm me in a similar way.

So much has changed in these last few months. I used to see my friends a lot. Things are different now. When I see friends, we get to hang out for a short amount of time while practicing social distancing and wearing masks. Now we have to stay behind closed doors and wait for the day to come where we can reach some form of normalcy.

As the hours dragged on, with countless wheels on the freeway, we played music so loud, you could not hear others speak. With so many different types of music, this ride was like a concert.

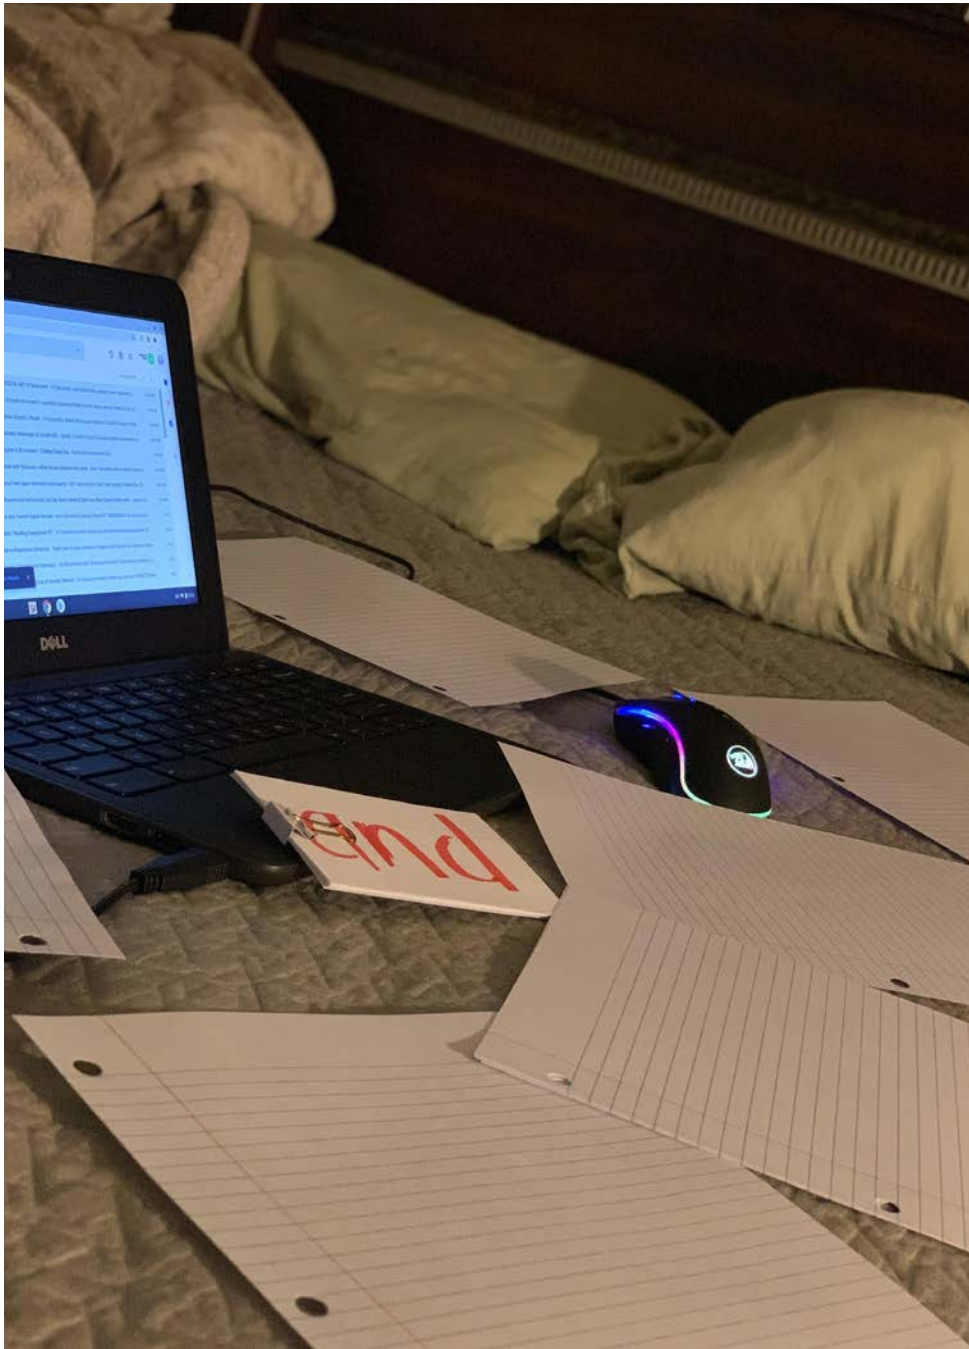

So much has changed for Halloween, there were barely any trick-or-treaters out there. Now we are all home cuddled up, watching spooky movies in the dark with no candy.

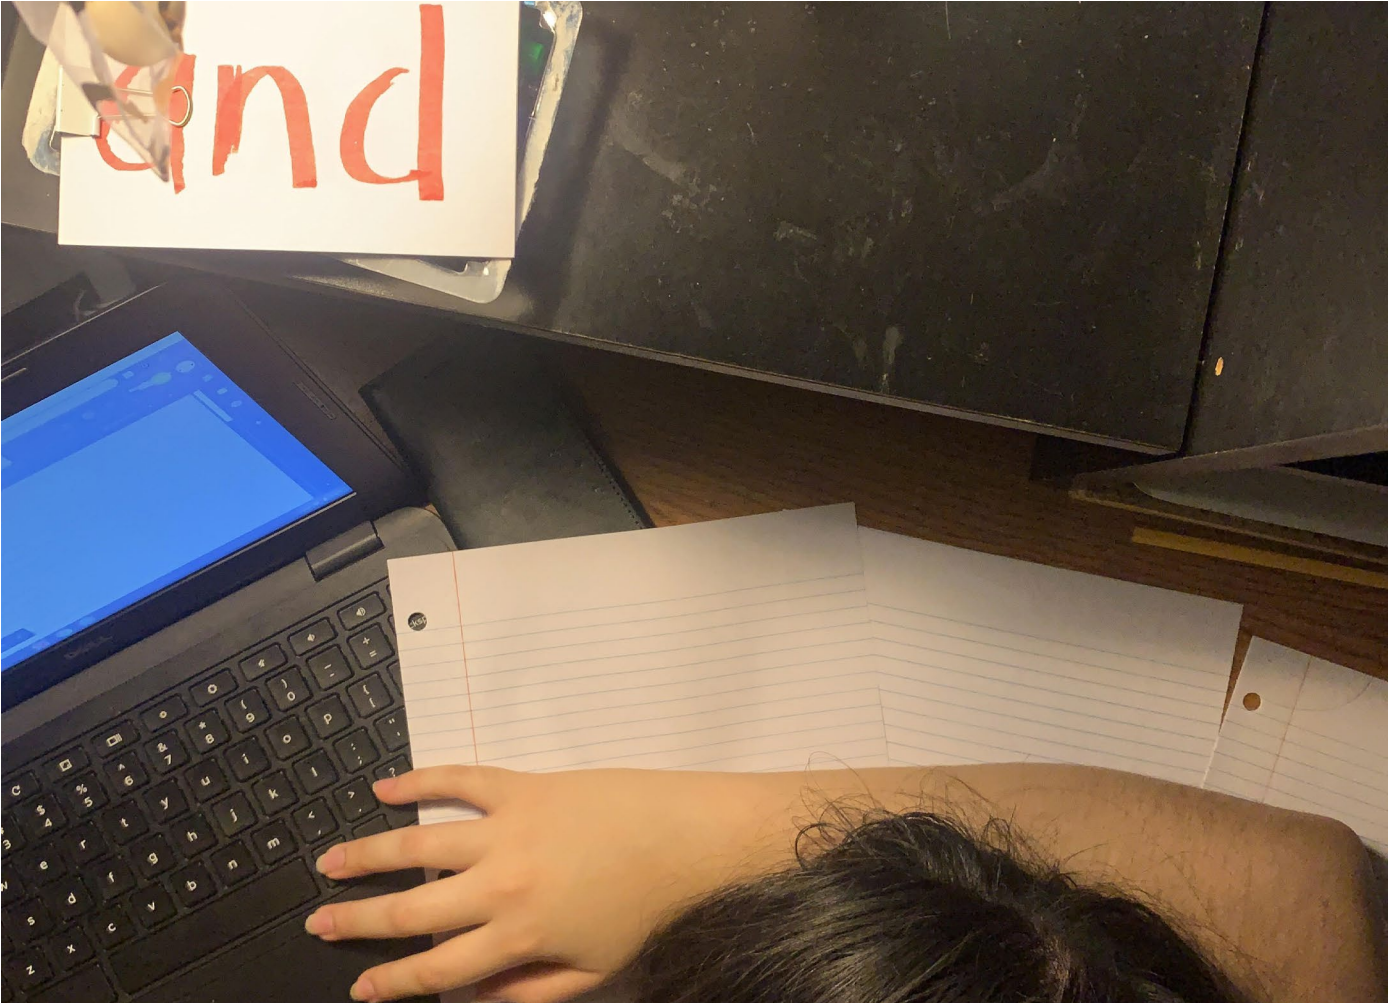

Before quarantine, I was always hanging around with my friends before class and outside of school. Post COVID- 19, I'm stuck at home, constantly doing online school work and rarely hanging out with my friends.

I hear loud voices outside my door as I try to focus. The music playing only slightly blocks out the noise from outside.

The smell of wood surrounds me as I lay my head down. The loud crunch of car wheels coming down the driveway surrounds my ears.

As the fires continue to grow worse in California, global warming and climate change is still ignored by the 45th president.

As the day of elections comes closer, the world awaits the outcome. Hope for the United States or destruction of democracy?
